Shaping Your Leadership Story

Removing the Barriers

When I envision the type of leader I want to be, I instantly think of:

Earlier today, I created a content map of different leadership traits. My top five include:

As I reflect more on these traits and my own leadership style, I believe I have the ability to:

Although I am a great leader, I can improve my leadership style by:

I can also take immediate action in my community and school through:

I know that the Global Citizenship Initiative is a good way for National Student Council and Honor Society members to demonstrate leadership. When I think about global change as a student leader, especially now, I want to use my freedom and interests to impact:

I am excited to explore new ways of looking at leadership and vow to continue developing my personal story by:
